Merry Christmas!

No matter where you land on the naughty or nice-o-meter I hope you have the happiest of holidays! And don't fret if the guy in the red suit leaves you nothing but coal in your stocking, I've got a bunch of giveaways planned for you in 2022 - the first of which is coming up in January so make sure you have marked my emails as safe/primary/etc. so you never miss a freebie!

\(Here's a link of how to do that if you have Gmail\)

Speaking of giveaways... thanks to everyone who participated in my $20 Amazon Gift Card giveaway. I loved hearing about your favorite/most impactful reads! And congratulations to Melissa A., the lucky winner!

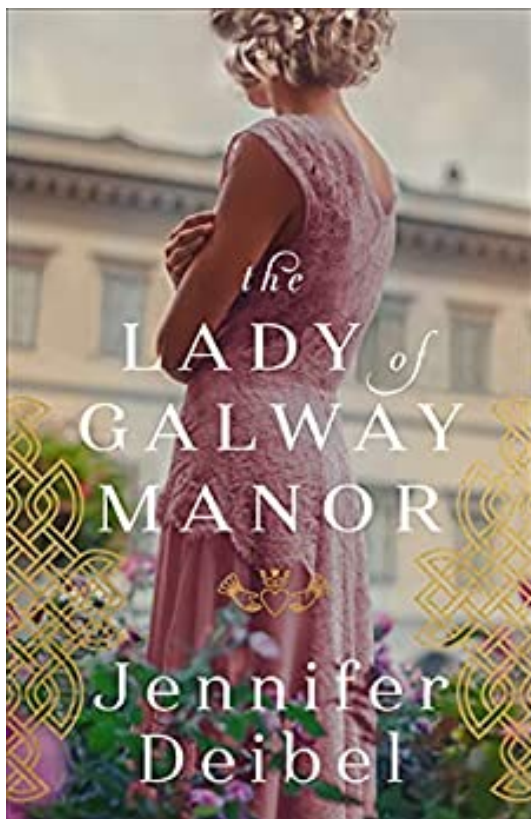

The novel she mentioned was Joanne Bischof's "The Lady and the Lionheart" which has been on my radar FORE.EV.ER. and has been added to that always-growing to-be-read list along with several other mentions. Thanks for the recommendations!

Not exactly a Christmas card, but I like it!

A Look Ahead

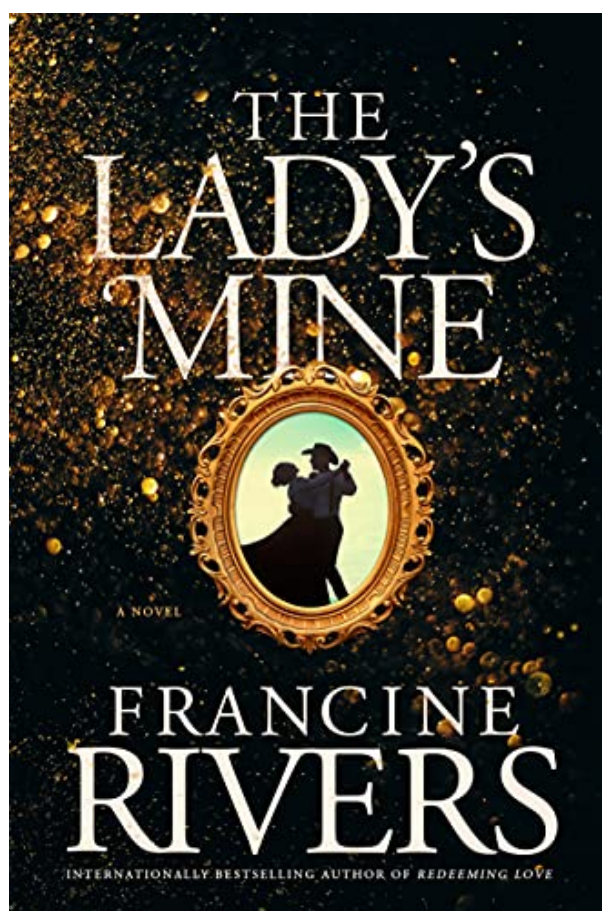

Despite the news about paper and book shortages, there are a ton of new titles releasing in 2022 that have me super excited! Here's just a couple to start:

Available February 1st, you can pre-order this book right now at Baker Book House for cheaper than Amazon. The Lady of Galway Manor is Jennifer Deibel's second novel and I can't wait for her to whisk me away to Ireland again. Her writing offers an immersive experience in the culture and history, then add in some civil unrest and a star-crossed lovers vibe and I AM HERE FOR IT!

Releasing February 8th, you can also pre-order Francine River's latest book, again at Baker Book House. "Queen Francine" is one of my favorite authors of all time, so while the premise of this particular book doesn't call to me like so many of her others have, you can bet I'm still intrigued.

Also, her most famous novel has FINALLY been made into a movie! Redeeming Love opens January 21st and the trailer gives me chills every time I watch it! Check it out!

Alright my bookish buddies, I think that's it for now. Have a joy-filled and SAFE Christmas and New Years (no papercuts or hardcover pile-ups) and watch for my next newsletter and your chance to win a very special prize!

♡ Sarah
